DIGITAL SCHOLARLY EDITIONS AND API CONSUMING APPLICATIONS

Slide Deck: <http://lombardpress.org/slides/2016-09-24-graz-dixit-conference/>

Can we conceptualize machines as users? How can we include application programming interfaces (APIs) in the discussion on DSEs as interfaces?

Plurality in representation is a core feature of DSE. How do interfaces realize this plurality? Do we need different interfaces for different target audiences (i.e. scholars, digital humanists, students, public)?

Welcome to the Peter Auriol Homepage

The Peter Auriol Homepage is an attempt to catalogue and disseminate information about recent and ongoing work dealing with the French Franciscan Peter Auriol (Aureol, Auriole, Pierre d'Auriole, Petrus Aureoli). Hopefully this will encourage exchange among scholars interested in Auriol.

The Peter Auriol Homepage includes an Auriol bibliography as well as preliminary editions and translations of texts by Auriol.

The Peter Auriol Homepage is maintained by Russell L. Friedman (Institute of Philosophy, Catholic University of Leuven) and, since the present version 2.0, by Florian Wöller (Department of Theology, University of Basel), with the financial assistance of the Research Council of the Catholic University of Leuven. If you are working on any aspect of Peter Auriol's philosophy or theology, please send us a description of your project. We will then make the information generally available at this website.

For recent updates to the Peter Auriol Homepage see our Auriol News.

Peter of Candia Project

The Peter of Candia Project is an international collaborative effort to further the study of the life and thought of Peter of Candia O.F.M., the man born in Crete around 1340 as Petrus Philarghi and buried at Bologna in 1410 as Pope Alexander V. The Project aims to serve as an introduction to Peter of Candia, his life and work, and to make available via the internet an exhaustive bibliography concerning Peter of Candia, and eventually intends to publish electronic editions of the complete works of this important philosopher, theologian and church leader.

The project is made possible by generous support of the Institute of Medieval Philosophy and Theology at Boston College, and the Department of History and Archaeology at the University of Cyprus.

This page is currently maintained by William Duba.

Ut enim egregius doctor Augustinus ait in libro De doctrina christiana: Omnis doctrina vel rerum est, vel signorum. Sed res etiam per signa discuntur. Proprie autem hic res appellantur, quae non ad significandum aliquid adhibentur; signa vero, quorum usus est in significando.

[DIFFICULTATES CIRCA FIDEM]

Sed hic occurrunt arduae difficultates; et primo consideranda est 3 descriptio fidei quam ponit APOSTOLUS, scilicet, “fides est substantia rerum sperandarum, argumentum non apparentium.” Ubi secun-20 dum ALTISSIODORENSIS in principio suae Summae et GUILLELMUM respectu credendorum, et caritatis, respectu amandorum; unde imaginatur quod sicut caritas dirigit hominem ad diligendum Deum propter se, ita proportionaliter fides inclinatur intellectum ad credendum primae 25 veritati propter se et super omnia sine alia apparentia. Ideo fides est argumentum, et non est consequens nec conclusio. Ideo sicut inquit GUILLELMUS ALTISSIODORENSIS “a quodam bene dictum est quod apud ARISTOTELEM argumentum est ratio rei dubiae faciens fidem, apud autem Christum est fides faciens rationem.” Et hoc videtur tenet quod articuli fidei sunt conclusiones ex aliis deductae, ad quas concludendas; et non sunt tamquam principia ex quibus alia theologice deducuntur.
