

UNIVERSITY OF MINNESOTA ACADEMIC OVERVIEW

Profile and Locale

Reputation: Comprehensive research university with more than 250 fields of study, known worldwide for top-ranked programs and innovative research

Location: Two unique downtowns with excellent theaters, music venues, museums and professional sports, welcoming a diverse and international community

Opportunities: Valuable real-world experiences include service learning, the Undergraduate Research Opportunity Program, and student leadership groups.

The University of Minnesota enrolls about 52,000 undergraduate and graduate students; about 5,500 are international students. The University has an extensive library system, impressive sports stadiums, and unique performing arts facilities.

The “Twin Cities” of Minneapolis and St. Paul are the main commercial and cultural center of the upper Midwest; the metropolitan area is home to 3.3 million people and several Fortune 500 companies. Both cities are on convenient rail, bus, and bike routes. Nearby lakes, trails, and parks provide many outdoor recreation opportunities.

Academic Notes

- All exchange students are admitted as non-degree-seeking undergraduate students, unless they have independently been admitted to a degree-seeking undergraduate or graduate program (see below)
- All students must be prepared to take a full load of courses and be flexible regarding course work, as some courses are not available to non-degree-seeking students
- The University will admit qualified exchange participants only in the divisions as mentioned above
- Students are able to choose from courses outside their major field of study
- Courses restricted to PhD students only (i.e. 8000-level) are not available to exchange students.
- Research opportunities are not arranged
- A full course load for undergraduate level coursework is 12 - 16 credits per semester. Students should not expect to earn more than 16 credits in a single term.

Students can find online listings of specific semester class schedules at www.onestop.umn.edu.

Students are asked not to contact academic department in advance, as they are not prepared to advise exchange students, and they are not aware of the special restrictions that may apply.

Degree Program Application Notes

Students pursuing a UMN degree must apply directly to the Graduate or Undergraduate Admissions office on their own. Application deadlines can be as early as December for entrance the following year. Please note that the list above does not identify graduate degree programs. Graduate entrance exam and English proficiency requirements vary by program. Students wishing to enter a graduate degree program should be accepted to the graduate degree program prior to starting the exchange in order to have credits apply towards their graduate program. Visit www.umn.edu for more information.
