Short description: Edgar Allan Poe is undoubtedly one of the most powerful and imaginative writers American literature has produced to this very day. Despite his lasting influence on European writers and his impact on the creation of modern psychology, Poe has been widely neglected and even ostracized by U.S. literary criticism. (F.O. Matthiessen, for example, excludes him from the canon of important writers of the ›American Renaissance‹.) In this course, we will immerse ourselves in crucial writings by Edgar Allan Poe, including his poetry, tales, satires, grotesques, and his only novel. We will discuss works such as »The Fall of the House Usher« (1839), »The Purloined Letter« (1844), »The Black Cat« (1843), »The Cask of Amontillado« (1846), »The Raven« (1845), and his cosmological treatise »Eureka« (1848), exploring the aesthetics of Poe's style as well as the issues of genre, humor, authorship, gender, sexuality, and race. Special emphasis will be put on the origins of the modern detective story and the redefinition of the Gothic tradition in Poe’s writings.
