DENTAL CALCULUS AND THE ANCIENT MEDITERRANEAN

This talk will show case the multiple aspects of past lives that can be made visible by the study of ancient human dental calculus. A dental calculus is made up of mineralised dental plaque. During its formation it can incorporate particles and molecules from the human mouth. This talk will provide an understanding of its potential in Archaeology.

The series is part of the course 'Current Research in Eastern Mediterranean Studies' at University of Graz, but the lectures are open to all.
