Peace Processes in a Fragmented World
Language: English

The conflict dynamics of today's world are being shaped by new and reemergent geopolitical rivalries. Against the backdrop of the increasing fragmentation of power centres, international relations have become more polarized, creating an atmosphere of heightened unpredictability. Working for peace requires, now more than ever, a continuous process of transformation, re-evaluating established solutions while acknowledging and appreciating diverse viewpoints. Each region, including Africa, Europe, and the Middle East, has its own unique stories to tell.

2nd Conference Day

Innovation for Peace: Conflict and Climate

Language: English

The climate crisis is redefining the nature of conflicts. Countries and regions currently affected by conflict are often the least equipped to grapple with the disruptive impact of climate change. Paradoxically, the climate crisis also holds the potential to serve as a mutual challenge encouraging cooperation, which builds trust between conflict parties.
