Susanne Ekman holds an MA in anthropology and PhD in management from Copenhagen Business School. She is primarily interested in ethics and identity processes related to knowledge work in late capitalism. This includes a focus on responsibility, opportunism and professional ethics. She has written extensively on navigation strategies for both managers and employees operating in contexts of intense cross-pressures and paradoxical value spheres. On a larger scale, Ekman’s work all revolves around the complex relation between power and freedom, and the question of how to form ethically sustainable communities in an era dominated by neoliberal practices.

Selected publications